"Hurry up! I'm getting late." These words are very familiar to our ears. We all are in a big rush, making haste all the time. We've made our life compact because of this rush. We follow the proverb 'Time and tide wait for no man.' Definitely, it is the gospel truth because we wish to work more than our capacity. Time is no more a gentle deity rather it cuts the thread of life. We believe in the word 'instant' as we want everything instantly. Therefore, to get things done instantly we have chosen speed. Man wishes to conquer all and so to overpower time, he has taken to multi-tasking. But in this overdrive, he forgets that with multi tasking, he is overburdening himself and thus fails to excel in any particular field. He is jack of all trades but master of none. Moreover, multi tasking does not give a sense of satiety and reflects on a person's health. The harsh reality is that we want to save time when we really want to do more and faster whereas it might be easier to recognize that there is time and we make choices about how to spend it, spare it, use it and fill it. Time is not a thing we have lost, it is what we live in.
